

Global shares maintain momentum

- Talk surrounding Donald Trump's proposed tax reforms and solid economic data more than offset concerns about North Korea, the US Federal Reserve announcing that they will commence to trim their balance sheet and likely lift rates again this year.
- In Europe Angela Merkel was returned as Chancellor in the German elections, albeit with a reduced majority. News headlines emphasised potential uncertainty following the less than resounding result but markets focussed on the health of the German economy and European share and bond markets held up well.
- Despite these uncertainties global shares continued to perform strongly, particularly developed market shares, and bonds corrected lower.
- Australian shares continued to underperform global shares and the AUD slipped from recent highs.
- Australian economic data was quite positive with GPD growth solid, employment lifting and business confidence survey data elevated.
- The RBA remained upbeat but left the cash rate unchanged at 1.50%.
